Today Dunfermline witnessed one of the best-attended political shindigs in modern Scottish memory, the Annual Conference of the Scottish Liberal Democ-rats.

More than 2500 delegates and guests thronged the city, eclipsing even the remarkable SNP conference held last week in Perth. The @ScoLimDimCon was also superior to the @ScoNatCeilidh as it was skilfully completed in a single afternoon, rather than being tediously dragged out over four days.

Even a pre-dawn attack by a group of seldom-showered Bravehearts, who callously planted incendiary saltires all over the venue, without a thought for the sensibilities of old-style Liberals who may still be members of the party. These dinosaurs of the movement may retain some form of vestigial conscience, and could be highly embarrassed by the cruel taunts of the separatists.

The separatist shirkers (pictured) had originally invaded the perimeter of the ScoLibDumCon church hall around 2 am, deploying a number of saltire devices. MI5 sources confirmed that members of two proscribed (not to say smelly) organisations, CyBOS and SMNT, were present in the crowd.

The offending banners were soon removed by brave security forces, who swept the area making it safe again for Scottish cringers to pass through with no saltires to sadden their eye.

However, the splittist agitators returned at 7 am, while delegates were still enjoying their high fibre cereals, and deployed several newly purchased St. Andrews crossfire flags in strategically chosen points around the conference, undoing the sterling work of our brave boys in ninja black.

Several innocent members of the huge crowd of unionist revellers were then accosted by the marauding natz, who assaulted them in the hand region with ballistic leaflets of a radical nature. These unfortunates included upstanding pillars of the Westminster expense community such as Mickey Moore and Dannii Alexander, who both had much more important things to do.
